COVER LETTER

Hi, I'm Thomas Brett Labouchere, a Systems Administrator based in Minnesota with a background spanning enterprise device deployment, endpoint management, infrastructure support, and cybersecurity.

I currently work as a System Administrator II at IWCO Direct, where I own the full Microsoft Intune and Jamf environments, support 24/7 production operations, collaborate with the information security team, and handle general helpdesk support across the organization. Before that, I led a large-scale device deployment of roughly 5,000 endpoints at Aspirus Health, which gave me a strong foundation in working under pressure across complex, distributed environments.

I'm finishing an AAS in Network Administration and Cybersecurity at Lake Superior College and actively pursuing further education and certifications in the security space. I'm particularly drawn to the intersection of AI and cybersecurity, and I enjoy building tools and systems that solve real problems, not just maintaining the status quo.

Outside of work, I'm someone who takes things apart to understand how they work and puts them back together better than before. That mindset carries into everything I do professionally.

If you're looking for someone who is technically sharp, self-directed, and genuinely curious about this field, I'd love to connect.
